PREFACE

Reading is the cornerstone of learning, yet it remains one of the most pressing challenges in education today. In response, the Division of Bukidnon proudly introduces Bukidnon's Unified Literacy and Intervention Gateway (BULIG) — a transformative innovation designed to improve learners' reading ability and empower every child to succeed.

BULIG is more than a program; it is a unified movement for literacy, built on collaboration, evidence-based strategies, and a deep commitment to equity in education. This initiative bridges gaps in reading proficiency by providing targeted interventions, innovative approaches, and sustainable support systems that cater to the diverse needs of learners across the division.

Anchored on this vision, the Division of Bukidnon integrates the ARAL Program (Academic Recovery and Accessible Learning), a national initiative focused on learning recovery and remediation. ARAL provides structured and learner-centered interventions for those struggling with foundational skills in reading and numeracy. By complementing BULIG's mission, ARAL strengthens the division's comprehensive approach to literacy, ensuring that learners overcome difficulties and gain the confidence to succeed academically. Together, these programs create a powerful synergy that accelerates learning recovery and builds a strong foundation for lifelong learning.

Through BULIG, we envision classrooms where every learner reads with confidence, comprehends with clarity, and learns with purpose. This gateway opens opportunities for lifelong learning, ensuring that no child is left behind in the journey toward academic excellence and personal growth.

Together, let us make literacy not just a goal, but a reality for all.

THE JELLYFISH

Our oceans, seas, gulfs, and bays teem with jellyfish. They are found near the shores, especially during the hot summer months. Most common are the transparent jellyfish which are hardly seen in the water. They have an umbrella-shaped body, convex and smooth when seen from above. From the underside hang four to 20 tentacles with small cup-shaped disks used by the jellyfish to catch its prey of tiny fish, crustaceans, or planktons.

Most of the jellyfish found in Philippine waters are harmless. Some species, however, those that have darker shaded bodies, can produce severe itching. Others can cause painful welts when their tentacles attach themselves to the human body.

Found in the Atlantic and the Mediterranean Ocean are a deadly species of the giant jellyfish, called the Portuguese man-of-war. A smaller variety is found in the Pacific Ocean.
Occasionally, some of these deadly Portuguese man-of-war are carried to our shores by the winds and the sea currents.

The giant Portuguese man-of-war as well as the smaller variety have the same convex body as the common jellyfish. Atop the body, however, is a crescent-shaped, hollow bladder filled with air serving as a balloon float buoying the jellyfish on top of the water. Trailing away are fishing tentacles that slowly writhe and reach for prey as deep as a hundred feet below the surface of the water. These deadly fishing lines are studded with thousands of stinging cells that contain poison almost as powerful as a cobra's venom. Studies made have identified the poison as "neurotoxia" - a protein substance that deranges the nervous system. To small fishes this poison means instant death. So deadly is the poison that even a dead and dried Portuguese man-of-war stranded on the beach, when stepped on can cause extreme pain. The venom of this jellyfish can be stored for as long as six years without losing its potency.

To a man in the water, the venom acts with incredible speed. The victim writhes in pain and his breathing becomes difficult. He lapses into shock and his pulse becomes rapid and feeble. There is no known human antidote for the Portuguese man-of-war 's venom, but common rubbing alcohol seems to neutralize the poison. Natives of the Atlantic shores wash the infected area with strong detergent. If none is handy, they use urine.

So when out to sea, when wading or swimming, beware of a balloon-like half moon floating on the water. It may be the dangerous jellyfish which might have come in with the tide-the Portuguese man-of-war

Day 2

THE LION IS DYING

The lion is the largest and most celebrated of the cat family. It has an apparently large-sized head because of the great mane which covers its head, neck, and shoulders. By the time the lion is five or six years old, it can weigh more than 500 lbs and can be over 9 ½ feet long from the tip of its nose to the tip of its tail.

The lion has the reputation of being fearless, but it is more accurate to describe it as sly. Its instincts are like those of a house cat and it hunts like a cat. It quietly stalks its prey, then making a short, quick bound, lands on it. It mauls and bites the head of its victim until its neck is broken, and its veins and arteries are torn out open.

The lion will eat anything it can find. While in the prime of its strength, it will hunt all sizes of deer, zebra and even buffaloes. However, as it grows older, it may live on rodents, scorpions and tiny creatures, even rotting meat. The lion was at one time known as the king of the jungle. The jungles of Africa, Asia Minor, and India were once the lion's domain. But man has been slowly but surely exterminating the species. The lion has disappeared in Asia Minor, Iran and even in many parts of Africa. The remnants of the lion family in Asia are now confined in Northwestern India's GIR forest, a reservation. There, some 160 lions remain, a pathetic remnant of a once prolific species.

However, even in its sanctuary, the lions are losing their natural prey of deer and wild buffaloes because men have encroached on the sanctuary and have domesticated the buffaloes. The lions are forced to slaughter and feed on domesticated buffaloes and the herdsmen retaliate by killing the lions.

The king of the jungle is fast becoming extinct. Unless man would give the lions a place where they can live and multiply peacefully, and where their natural diet of deer and other animals can also live, many may never see a lion again except in museums or in picture books.

Day 3

THE SMALLEST FISH IN THE WORLD

Before 1925, the "tabios" was thought to have been the smallest fish in the world. A full-grown "tabios" measured a fraction over eleven millimetres. The "tabios" are found in Lake Buhi, in the Bicol Region of Luzon.

In 1925, Dr. Albert Herre, an ichthyologist was assigned by the American government to identify and describe Philippine fishes. From a collection of the Philippine National Museum, he found the prototypes of a still smaller type of fish. There were 75 of the tiny fish which he named Pandaka pygmaea in a bottle. They were so small that the "tabios" appeared big by comparison.

When Dr. Herre went back to the United States, he sent a few specimens to the Stanford National Science Museum. Dr. Herre's findings were doubted because this fish remained a rarity. No one had ever seen a live specimen of the fish that Dr. Herre claimed was the smallest fish in the world.

On February 28, 1951, Ricardo Esguerra, one of the marine biologists working in the saltwater experiments station of the Bureau of Fisheries in Malabon, Rizal, excitedly called Up the Bureau's main office and announced that he had found live specimens of the Pandaka.

Inocencio Ronquillo, an expert of the Bureau, hurried to the experiment station and studied the tiny fish which had eluded scientists for many years. He measured and weighed them. To confirm his findings, Ronquillo wrote to the curator of Stanford University Museum of Natural Science and asked for some specimen of the fish that Dr. Herre had taken before. Finally, Dr. Leonard Schulz, the museum's representative pronounced that they were one and the same type. Thus after 25 years, the Philippines could at least claim to have the world's smallest fish. The Pandaka has now been found in various parts of the Philippines.

The smallest fish is known under the scientific name of Pandaka pygmaea. Samples have been sent to museums and aquariums of cities all over the world.

The Pandaka's average length when full grown is 9.66 millimeters or about the size of a grain of rice. It has a moderately elongated body that is wedgeshaped when viewed from above. Its head is large in proportion to its size. Its eyes protrude. It has two rows of teeth on either side of the jaw, the outer teeth being larger and more widely set than the inner row.

Day 4

SHARKS, MONSTERS OF THE DEEP

To many, sharks are the most fearful of all denizens of the sea. Some sharks are monsters of more than 30 feet long. They are slow, but powerful and dangerous, too.

Among the sharks, the tiger shark is the most vicious killer. It is not very big. It is only six to eight feet long. This species hunts in pairs or in packs, and attacks on the slightest excuse. The attack and viciousness of the tiger shark is unbelievably swift and relentless.

Man has discovered that he will never be a match for any shark in the water. But because he had to go to sea for his own livelihood, he had to find a way to keep himself free from the attack of sharks.

Hunting sharks is a hazardous operation. Sharks are hunted mostly because of the menace they pose. Fishermen who depend on the sea for their livelihood go on shark hunting expeditions with the sole purpose of ridding their fishing grounds of these monsters.

Fishermen go in groups to shark-infested zones. They use decomposed meat as shark baits. As the sharks surface, they are shot with harpoons. The wounded sharks are attacked by other sharks, so the killing continues-man against shark, and shark against shark.

The Malaysians have developed a safe but sure method of killing sharks. They toss hundreds of iron spikes wrapped in chunks of meat to the sharks. When the shark gulps the meat. he is as good as dead. The shark suffers from stomach ache and while it writhes in pain, its movement will cause balls of spikes to make its way into its innards and make it die.

Another method used by fishermen is to tow baited hooks behind slow-cruising fishing boats. When the sharks dart in for the bait, they are shot dead by the fishermen safe aboard their boats.

Sulu fishermen have discovered that there was one sound that sharks do not like. It is a noise made by rubbing and banging together an iron harpoon head and whetstone under water. When the Sulu skin-divers dive for mother-of-pearls or for underwater seafood in the shark-infested Sulu Sea, they take along with them a harpoon and whetstone, which they rub and bang together to drive sharks away.

Day 5

THE MOST WONDERFUL BIRTHDAY GIFT

Lauro was in his senior year, the youngest and incidentally, the brightest in his class. Unfortunately, he came from the poorest family in the whole town. His father squandered his little earnings at the cockpit and the tuba joint. Lauro's mother prayed daily that her husband would stop drinking and gambling. Lauro often dreamed what it would be like if he had been a son of a better and more responsible father. But above all these, he wished for the day his father would announce that he had saved money for Lauro's studies in college.

Yes, Lauro's dream was to go to college after his graduation. This is the only way he could help improve their lot.

Lauro blamed the town for their misfortune. The society of the town was all rotten. There were the tuba joint, the cockpit, and the crooked officials who did nothing but match their cocks and drink tuba.

For these reasons, Lauro came to dislike the town to the point of hating it. Instead of taking the short cut to the high school where he studied, he traveled a long way to the bank of the river and passed through the woods. This was the best way to avoid passing the tuba joint where his father would surely be anytime. The mere shadow of the tuba joint with the town officials drinking with his father made Lauro's blood boil.

Yes, Lauro would never forget the incident during his Junior year. His father had won in the tupada and had promised to pay his matriculation fee but when he went to the store to fetch his father, he was more drunk than usual and had spent all the money he had won. Before he could run home to tell his mother the sad news, his father stripped off his clothes. For days and weeks, Lauro did not show up on the street and never again did he pass that way.

That afternoon on the first day of the opening of the classes, Lauro took the long way again. It was still dark and he could hardly see the narrow trail. As he approached the balete tree, he was about to run when he heard voices. As he peeped through the bush he saw a group of young men towing a clothing full of money in a clump of dry twigs. After they had gone, Lauro took the bag of money from its hiding place. He knew at once that it belonged to Mang Kulas, a councilor of the town who owned the tuba joint. Lauro seemed to hear voices around him. "Now is your chance to have all the money you need to go to college. Run, Lauro! Run home!"

But Lauro did not seem to hear the voice. Instead, he went straight to Mang Kulas' joint. All he wanted was to return the money and save what he could of his father's name.

The usual crowd was at Mang Kulas' store. He noticed that Mang Kulas was serious and seemed to be angry in spite of the fact that his joint was crowded. "How dishonest people can be," Lauro heard Mang Kulas mutter.

Lauro placed the bag of money in front of Mang Kulas.

"I found this near the balete tree," he said.

The next day was Lauro's birthday. He took the short cut home but was surprised to find Mang Kulas' joint empty. Not even his father was there so he ran home to tell his mother. At the door he was met by Mang Kulas.

"Happy birthday, Lauro," he said. "I have something for you."

He took out a bank book and some rolls of money his pocket. "For your college education," he said giving the bank book and money to Lauro.

Lauro held Mang Kulas' arm. "Thank you, but why is your joint empty, Mang Kulas?"

"It will be empty for as long as I live," Mang Kulas answered. "I want my children to be proud of me. I also have a duty to the people who elected me. Goodbye, son."

Day 6

NOT THE END OF THE WORLD

When news about a man that had been run over by a train was flashed, a police officer on late night patrol thought after seeing the crumpled body, "Doctors could not save this man, and even if he survives, what then?"

The man was motionless, his legs were severed far above the knees. Soon the sound of an ambulance was heard.

After a week, the man named Levy had a hazy memory of the traumatic happening. He remembered having swung into the slow-moving train and fell between the cars.

Levy's friends and relatives showered him with love, care, and concern. Doctors spoke of surgery that might end up with artificial limbs. Knowing Levy as an independent man all his life, this medical decision hammered a note of pride deep withinhim.

After many years of losing his legs, he said he did not want help from anybody. Speaking with a resolute and powerful voice, he said he wanted to see what he could do on his own- just God and him. He never doubted he was going to be all right.

Since he was living alone, without a wife (because she deserted him) and without children, he did not have to worry about dependents. He was eligible for social security disability, which he turned down. His goal was to live a normal life.

Refusing a wheelchair, Levy's kind of traveling has been a source of inspiration and happiness to people in his community. He travels on an 18-inch homemade cart that sits about five inches off the ground. With one wheel on the front and two on the rear, the contraption is put into motion by two semicircular wooden and rubber "walking blocks" powered by the strong muscles of Levy's arms. He sits straight, tightly buckled into his cart.

He makes his rounds through the streets, waves at people, and chats with them about any topic under the sun.

If Levy senses any pity coming his way, he is quick to say, "I am a lot better off than most people who feel sorry for me. I just wish they would look at me and try to understand what is in my heart, what makes me go. I think that is why God kept me around."

What are in Levy's heart? Courage, faith, and will power. All these are in everybody's heart, but some people do not ever find them in themselves; they spend their time worrying about what they do not have, or complaining.

He shows the importance of not giving up. He also shows us all that we can and must take control of our lives, no matter what happens to us.

It is nice to reflect on these values inspired by Levy. He made a courageous decision when he declared he would do things his way-alone with God's help. Against all worldly odds, he has prevailed and shown others something about himself. Most importantly, he has shown them something noble about themselves.

Day 7

THE UNHAPPIEST WOMEN IN THE WORLD

Compared with the women of other countries in the civilized world, the Japanese women are said to be the unhappiest women of the world. These graceful, pretty women, who resemble butterflies in their brilliantly colored kimonos, always looked happy.

The smile masks their emotions. To them, the highest achievement is to bear sorrow with a smile.

From childhood, the Japanese woman is trained in this decorative surface happiness. Each movement of the head or of the hand is artificial, but it is learned so early in life it becomes second nature.

The Japanese custom requires that a wife shall know the family duties, etiquette, flower arrangement, and shall have graceful manners. She does not need to be intelligent, but she must be obedient to all her husband's wishes. A girl's entire education starts on the assumption that she is inferior to man, with no rights of her own.

There are only two careers open to an average Japanese woman: marriage or being a geisha. She has no legal status in marriage. She cannot divorce her husband, but he can divorce her at will by sending her back to her family. If she is divorced because she is childless, she becomes an outcast.

Whether rich or poor, the Japanese wife is a slave to her husband. She is the first to rise in the morning and the last to retire at night. When her husband comes home, she is oblige to greet him kneeling humbly at the doorway. Even in the wealthiest families, the wife serves her husband his breakfast, and scrubs his back. She may not sit in a cushion in his presence. When walking with him, she always follows at a distance, carrying his bundles.

When it is cold, the husband does not take off his coat to cover his wife; instead, the wife takes off her shawl and covers her husband. It offends the man's dignity if he were to hold his wife's coat or carry her bag, or show her the slightest courtesy.

Even a mother's pleasure on her children is restricted; because, according to law, they belong to the husband. The Japanese world belongs completely to the man; the wife has no place in it except to serve and bear his children.

The only woman who has a certain degree of freedom is the geisha. It is an old Japanese custom for a man to keep a geisha even immediately after his marriage. He makes her his comrade, and discuss his business with her, a companionship which is denied to his wife. The wife must accept her existence, and is forced to adopt her children.

The Japanese woman's only release is suicide. Even in killing herself she is restricted. She may drown herself or leap into a volcano, but she is not worthy to commit hara-kiri. This honorable death is reserved only for the Japanese man:

The situations discussed here happened in the past. At present, Japan has evolved from the traditional customs and is now fast becoming more democratic especially among the women.

THE STORY OF DAVID

Many centuries before the birth of Christ, a king named Saul reigned in Israel. Israel then was a much-troubled land. It was always at war with its neighbors, particularly the Philistines. Saul had beaten the Philistines in several battles, but the Philistines refused to be conquered.

The Philistines had a giant named Goliath on their side. He was 10 feet tall. He had a brass helmet, and he was clothed with a heavy coat of mail. Greaves of brass covered his legs, and a brass buckler covered his shoulders. His spear had a heavy iron head. He cried out to the bands of Israel: "Choose a man and let him fight me. If he kills me, we will all be your servants, but if I win you shall be the servants and serve us. When the Israelites heard Goliath's words, they were greatly dismayed for there was no one among them who can accept the challenge.

Now, David, a shepherd boy from Bethlehem, heard about it. He heard, too, of King Saul's promise of great riches and his daughter's hand in marriage to anyone who could slay the giant. David was brought before King Saul that he had chased, caught, and strangled a bear and a lion with his bare hands, and that the Lord who helped him kill the lion and the bear would likewise help him with the Philistines.

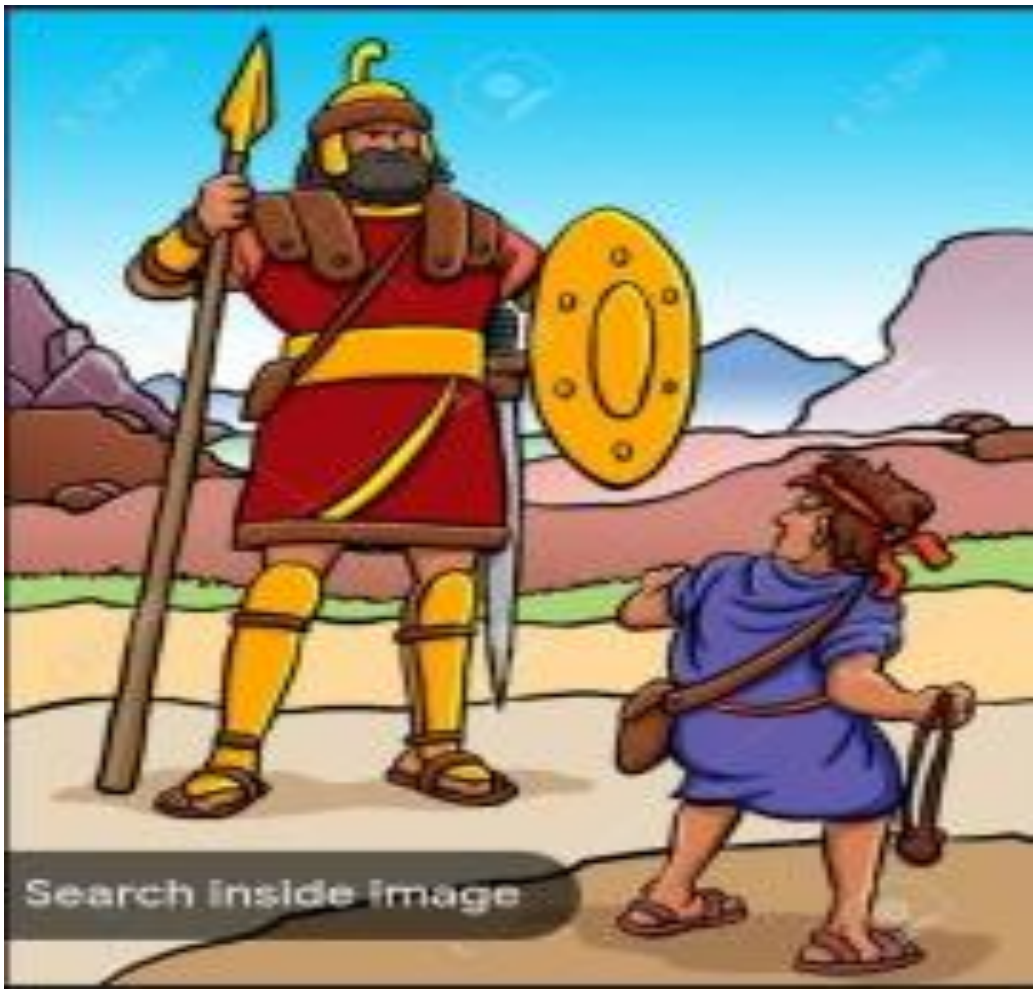

Saul clothed David with his own armor, a brass helmet, and a coat of mail, but these were too heavy for David. He could barely walk in armor, so he took them off and met Goliath with his shepherd's staff, his slingshot and five round stones.

Goliath taunted David for daring to fight him with only a staff, but David answered that he was armed with the might of the Lord whom the Philistines had defiled.

Goliath advanced to meet David. David then put a stone in his sling, whirled it three times over his head, and flung the stone. It struck Goliath in the forehead. The stone sank deep into it. As Goliath fell down, David ran out and cut off Goliath's head with the giant's own sword. The Philistines seeing their champion dead, fled away and were pursued by King Saul's army.

After the death of King Saul, David was appointed king. David who had a strong faith and trust in God became a great king of his people.

Day 9

THE OLD MAN AT THE BRIDGE

by: Ernest Hemingway

An old man with steel rimmed spectacles and very dusty clothes sat by the side of the road. There was a pontoon bridge across the river and carts, trucks, and men, women and children were crossing it. The mule-drawn carts staggered up the steep bank from the bridge with soldiers helping push against the spokes of the wheels. The trucks ground up and away heading out of it all and the peasants plodded along in the ankle-deep dust. But the old man sat there without moving. He was too tired to go any farther.

It was my business to cross the bridge, explore the bridgehead beyond and find out to what point the enemy had advanced. I did this and returned over the bridge. There were not so many carts now and very few people on foot, but the old man was still there.

"Where do you come from?" I asked him. "From San Carlos," he said, and smiled.

That was his native town and so it gave him pleasure to mention it and he smiled. "I was taking care of animals," he explained. "Oh," I said, not quite understanding.

"Yes," he said, "I stayed, you see, taking care of animals. I was the last one to leave the town of San Carlos."

He did not look like a shepherd, nor a herdsman and I looked at his black dusty clothes and his gray dusty face and his steel rimmed spectacles and said, "What animals were they?"

"Various animals," he said, and shook his head. "I had to leave them."

I was watching the bridge and the African looking country of the Ebro Delta and wondering how long now it would be before we would see the enemy, and listening all the while for the first noises that would signal that ever mysterious event called contact, and the old man still sat there.

"What animals were they?" I asked. "There were three animals altogether," he explained. "There were two goats and a cat and then there were four pairs of pigeons." "And you had to leave them?" I asked. "Yes. Because of the artillery. The captain told me to go because of the artillery."
"And you have no family?" I asked, watching the far end of the bridge where a few last carts were hurrying down the slope of the bank. "No," he said, "only the animals I stated. The cat, of course, will be all right. A cat can look out for itself, but I cannot think what will become of the others." "What politics have you?" I asked. "I am without politics," he said. "I am seventy-six years old. I have come twelve kilometers now and I think now I can go no further." "This is not a good place to stop," I said. "If you can make it, there are trucks up the road where it forks for Tortosa." "I will wait a while," he said, "and then I will go. Where do the trucks go?" "Towards Barcelona," I told him. "I know no one in that direction," he said, "but thank you very much. Thank you again very much."

He looked at me very blankly and tiredly, then said, having to share his worry with someone, "The cat will be all right, I am sure. There is no need to be unquiet about the cat. But the others. Now what do you think about the others?" "Why they'll probably come through it all right." "You think so?"
"Why not," I said, watching the far bank where now there were no carts. "But what will they do under the artillery when I was told to leave because of the artillery?" "Did you leave the dove cage unlocked?" I asked. "Yes." "Then they'll fly." "Yes, certainly they'll fly. But the others. It's better not to think about the others," he said. "If you are rested, I would go," I urged. "Get up and try to walk now."
"Thank you," he said and got to his feet, swayed from side to side, and then sat down backwards in the dust. "I was taking care of animals," he said dully, but no longer to me. "I was only taking care of animals."

There was nothing to do about him. It was Easter Sunday, and the Fascists were advancing toward the Ebro. It was a gray overcast day with a low ceiling so their planes were not up. That and the fact that cats know how to look after themselves was all the good luck that old man would ever have.

Day 10

A CONVERSATION FROM THE THIRD FLOOR

She came to the place for the second time. The policeman stared down at her from his horse.

The time was afternoon. The yellow-coloured wall was stretched right along the road. Inside the wall was a large rectangular three- storey building; its small identical windows looked more like dark apertures. The woman stood a few paces away from the horse. The policeman looked behind him at the windows, then at the woman. He placed both hands on the pommel of the saddle and closed his-eyes. After a while the horse moved. It was standing halfway down the street. Then, a moment later, it made a half-turn and once again stood itself at the top of the street.

The woman came two steps forward. The horse bent one of its forelegs, then gently lowered it.

"Sergeant, please, just let me say two words to him."

His eyes remained closed, his hands motionless on the pommel. Above the wall stretched a fencing of barbed wire at the end of which was a wooden tower. Inside there stood an armed soldier.

The woman took another step forward.

" You see, he's been transferred ..."

The sun had passed beyond the central point in the sky. Despite this the weather was still hot. A narrow patch of shade lay at the bottom of the wall.

The woman transferred the child to her shoulder.

When she again looked at the policeman's face, she noticed two thin lines of sweat on his forehead.

Quietly she moved away from in front of the horse and walked beside the wall. About halfway along it she sat down on a heap of stones opposite the building.

The prisoners' washing, hung by the arms and legs, could be seen.

She took the child between her hands and lifted him above her head.

She noticed his arms suddenly being withdrawn inside and his hands gripping the iron bars of the window. Then his face disappeared from view. For a while she searched for him among the faces that looked down. She lowered her arms a little and heard shouts of laughter from the window. She spotted his arm once again stretching outwards, then his face appeared clearly in the middle.

"Up, Aziza. Up. Face him towards the sun so I can see him." She lowered her arms for a moment, then raised him up again, turning his face towards the sun. The child closed his eyes and burst out crying.

"He's crying." He turned round, laughing. "The boy's crying! The little so-and-so! Aziza, woman, keep him crying!" He cupped his hand round his mouth and shouted, "Let him cry!"

Again he laughed. A few shouts went up around him. She heard their words and shouting. Then she saw his large nose poking out through the bars,

"Woman! Don't be silly, that's enough! Cover tile boy- he'll get sunstroke!" She hugged the child to her chest and saw the soldier withdrawing inside the tower "Did you prune the two date palms?" She shook her head. "Why not? Why don't you talk? I'm being transferred. Pass by Abu Ismail and tell him I send him my best wishes. He'll do it as a favour and prune the trees, then you can bring along a few dates. Did you bring the cigarettes?" She made a sign with her hand. "Talk. What are you saying?" "You've got 'em," "Louder, woman." "You've got 'em, I sent them to you." "When?" "Just Now."

Her face was against the sun. She shifted her head-veil slightly from her head.

"They took a couple of packets. Never mind, Aziza. Never mind."

He laughed. His voice had become calm. The other faces disappeared from above him, only a single face remaining alongside his.

"Did you build the wall? "Not yet." "Why not?" "When Uncle Ahmed lights the furnace, I'll get some bricks from him." "All right. Be careful on the tram. Look after the boy." She remained standing. "Anything you want?" "No."

She gazed at his face, his large nose, his bare arms. She smiled. The face next to him smiled back. Suddenly be shouted. "Did you get the letter? I'm being transferred."

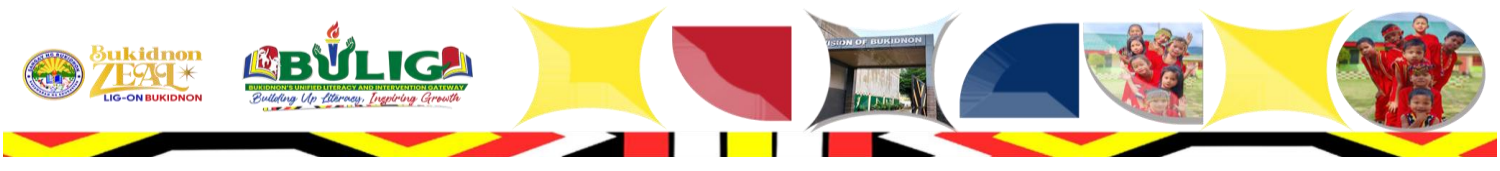

"Where to?" "I don't know." "When?" "You see, they're pulling down the prison." "Where will you go?" "God knows-anywhere. No one knows." "When?" "In two or three days. Don't come here again. I'll let you know when I'm transferred. Has the boy gone to sleep?" "No, he's awake." He stared back for a while in silence. "Aziza !"

Again there was silence. The face alongside his smiled, then slowly slid back inside and disappeared. Her husband remained silent, his arms around the bars.

Suddenly he glanced behind him and quickly drew in his arms. He signalled to her to move away, then disappeared from the window.She stepped back, though she remained standing.

Day 11

THE USE OF FORCE

They were new patients to me, all I had was the name, Olson. Please come down as soon as you can; my daughter is very sick.

When I arrived I was met by the mother, a big startled looking woman, very clean and apologetic who merely said, Is this the doctor? and let me in. In the back, she added. You must excuse us, doctor, we have her in the kitchen where it is warm. It is very damp here sometimes.

The child was fully dressed and sitting on her father's lap near the kitchen table. He tried to get up, but I motioned for him not to bother, took off my overcoat and started to look things over. I could see that they were all very nervous, eyeing me up and down distrustfully. As often, in such cases, they weren't telling me more than they had to, it was up to me to tell them; that's why they were spending three dollars on me.

The child was fairly eating me up with her cold, steady eyes, and no expression to her face whatever. She did not move and seemed, inwardly, quiet; an unusually attractive little thing, and as strong as a heifer in appearance. But her face was flushed, she was breathing rapidly, and I realized that she had a high fever. She had magnificent blonde hair, in profusion. One of those picture children often reproduced in advertising leaflets and the photogravure sections of the Sunday papers.

She's had a fever for three days, began the father and we don't know what it comes from. My wife has given her things, you know, like people do, but it don't do no good. And there's been a lot of sickness around. So we tho't you'd better look her over and tell us what is the matter.

As doctors often do I took a trial shot at it as a point of departure. Has she had a sore throat?

Both parents answered me together, No . . . No, she says her throat don't hurt her. Does your throat hurt you? added the mother to the child. But'the little girl's expression didn't change nor did she move her eyes from my face.Have you looked?

I tried to, said the mother, but I couldn't see. As it happens we had been having a number of cases of diphtheria in the school to which this child went during that month and we were all, quite apparently, thinking of that, though no one had as yet spoken of the thing.

Well, I said, suppose we take a look at the throat first. I smiled in my best professional manner and asking for the child's first name I said, come on, Mathilda, open your mouth and let's take a look at your throat. Nothing doing.

Aw, come on, I coaxed, just open your mouth wide and let me take a look. Look, I said opening both hands wide, I haven't anything in my hands. Just open up and let me see.

Such a nice man, put in the mother. Look how kind he is to you. Come on, do what he tells you to. He won't hurt you.

At that I ground my teeth in disgust. If only they wouldn't use the word "hurt" I might be able to get somewhere. But I did not allow myself to be hurried or disturbed but speaking quietly and slowly I approached the child again.

As I moved my chair a little nearer suddenly with one catlike movement both her hands clawed instinctively for my eyes and she almost reached them too. In fact she knocked my glasses flying and they fell, though unbroken, several feet away from me on the kitchen floor.

Both the mother and father almost turned themselves inside out in embarrassment and apology. You bad girl, said the mother, taking her and shaking her by one arm. Look what you've done The nice man...

For Heaven's sake, I broke in. Don' t call me a nice man to her. I'm here to look at her throat on the chance that she might have diptheria and possibly die of it. But that's nothing to her. Look here I said to the child, we are going to look at your throat. You're old enough to understand what I'm saying. Will you open it now by yourself or shall we have to open it for you?

Not a move. Even her expression hadn't changed. Her breaths however were coming faster and faster. Then the battle began I had to do it. I had to have a throat culture for her own protection. But first I told the parents that it was entirely up to them. I explained the danger but said I would not insist on an examination so long as they would take the responsibility. If you don't do what the doctor says you'll have to go to the hospital, the mother admonished her severely.

Oh yeah? I had to smile to myself. After all, I had already fallen in love with the savage brat, the parents were contempable to me. In the ensuing struggle they grew more and more abject, crushed, exhausted while she surely rose to magnificent heights of insane fury of effort bred of her terror of me.

The father tried his best, and he was a big man but the fact that she was his daughter, his shame at her behavior and his dread of hurting her made him release her just at the critical moment several times when I almost had achieved success, till I wanted to kill him. But his dread also that she might have diphtheria made him tell me to go on, go on though he himself was almost fainting, while the mother moved back and forth behind us raising and lowering her hands in an agony of apprehension.Put her in front of you on your lap, I ordered, and hold both her wrists.

But as soon as he did the child let out a scream. Don't, you re hurting me. Let go of my hands. Let them go I tell you. Then she shrieked terrifyingly, hysterically. Stop it! Stop it! You re killing me!Do you think she can stand it, doctor! said the mother.

You get out, said the husband to his wife. Do you want her to die of diphtheria?Come on now, hold her, I said.

Then I grasped the child's head with my left hand and tried to get the wooden tongue depressor between her teeth. She fought, with clenched teeth, desperately! But now I also had grown furious - at a child. I tried to hold myself down but I couldn't. I know how to expose a throat for inspection. And I did my best. When finally I got the wooden spatula behind the last teeth and just the point of it into the mouth cavity, she opened up for an instant but before I could see anything she came down again and gripping the wooden blade between her molars she reduced it to splinters before I could get it out again. Aren't you ashamed, the mother yelled at her. Aren't you ashamed to act like that in front of the doctor?Get me a smooth-handled spoon of some sort, I told the mother. We're going through with this. The child's mouth was already bleeding. Her tongue was cut and she was screaming in wild hysterical shrieks. Perhaps I should have desisted and come back in an hour or more. No doubt it would have been better. But I have seen at least two children lying dead in bed of neglect in such cases, and feeling that I must get a diagnosis now or never I went at it again. But the worst of it was that I too had got beyond reason. I could have torn the child apart in my own fury and enjoyed it. It was a pleasure to attack her. My face was burning with it.The damned little brat must be protected against her own idiocy, one says to one's self at such times. Others must be protected against her. It is social necessity. And all these things are true. But a blind fury, a feeling of adult shame, bred of a longing for muscular release are the operatives One goes on to the end.In a final unreasoning assault I overpowered the child's neck and jaws. I forced the heavy silver spoon back of her teeth and down her throat till she gagged. And there it was - both tonsils covered with membrane. She had fought valiantly to keep me from knowing her secret. She had been hiding that sore throat for three days at least and lying to her parents in order to escape just such an outcome as this.

Now truly she was furious. She had been on the defensive before but now she attacked. Tried to get off her father's lap and fly at me while tears.

Day 12

A FRIEND IN NEED IS A FRIEND INDEED

Once upon a time two very close friends lived in a village. As time passed their friendship grew thicker and thicker. Now they were grown up men.

One day they decided to go and find work. They set off.

Before leaving their village, they promised to stand by each other through thick and thin. They took oath of sincerity and assured each other of help in the hour of need. They had to pass through a jungle. They had not gone far into the thick forest when they found themselves face to face with a big bear. The bear began to move towards them. They felt helpless and terrified.

One of them knew how to climb a tree. He at once caught hold of a strong branch and swung up the tree. The other could not climb. He had heard that the bear does not eat the dead. So, he lay down on the ground and held his breath pretending to be dead. Meanwhile, the bear came to him and shifted him. The bear left him.

When the bear had gone out of sight, the friend on the tree came down. He asked his friend, "Dear friend, what did the bear whisper in your ear?" The other replied quickly, "The bear advised me not to trust a selfish friend." Saying this he left him and went away.

THE FOX AND THE CRANE

One day, a wicked fox invited a crane for dinner. The crane was very happy with the invitation. She reached the fox's home on time and knocked at the door with her long beak. She has been excited the whole day and was extremely hungry.

The fox soon served some soup in shallow bowls for both. The crane was surprised and angry too, as she could not have soup at all. Her long beak could not help her drink from the bowl.

But the fox licked up his soup quickly. Feeling cheated and humiliated, she decided to teach the fox a lesson soon.

She did not show her anger and behaved politely with the fox. Before leaving she invited him for dinner the next day. She made rice porridge for the dinner and served it in two tall narrow vases.

She happily drank her porridge from the vase. The fox tried hard but could not, as the neck of the vessel was narrow. The fox understood everything. He had learned his lesson and had to go home hungry.

Day 14

THE STORY OF AN HOUR
By: Kate Chopin (1894)

Knowing that Mrs. Mallard was afflicted with a heart trouble, great care was taken to break to her as gently as possible the news of her husband's death.

It was her sister Josephine who told her, in broken sentences; veiled hints that revealed in half concealing. Her husband's friend Richards was there, too, near her. It was he who had been in the newspaper office when intelligence of the railroad disaster was received, with Brently Mallard's name leading the list of "killed." He had only taken the time to assure himself of its truth by a second telegram, and had hastened to forestall any less careful, less tender friend in bearing the sad message.

She did not hear the story as many women have heard the same, with a paralyzed inability to accept its significance. She wept at once, with sudden, wild abandonment, in her sister's arms. When the storm of grief had spent itself, she went away to her room alone. She would have no one follow her.

There stood, facing the open window, a comfortable, roomy armchair. Into this she sank, pressed down by a physical exhaustion that haunted her body and seemed to reach into her soul.

She could see in the open square before her house the tops of trees that were all aquiver with the new spring life. The delicious breath of rain was in the air. In the street below a peddler was crying his wares. The notes of a distant song which some one was singing reached her faintly, and countless sparrows were twittering in the eaves.

There were patches of blue sky showing here and there through the clouds that had met and piled one above the other in the west facing her window.

She sat with her head thrown back upon the cushion of the chair, quite motionless, except when a sob came up into her throat and shook her, as a child who has cried itself to sleep continues to sob in its dreams.

She was young, with a fair, calm face, whose lines bespoke repression and even a certain strength. But now there was a dull stare in her eyes, whose gaze was fixed away off yonder on one of those patches of blue sky. It was not a glance of reflection, but rather indicated a suspension of intelligent thought.

There was something coming to her and she was waiting for it, fearfully. What was it? She did not know; it was too subtle and elusive to name. But she felt it, creeping out of the sky, reaching toward her through the sounds, the scents, the color that filled the air.

Now her bosom rose and fell tumultuously. She was beginning to recognize this thing that was approaching to possess her, and she was striving to beat it back with her will--as powerless as her two white slender hands would have been. When she abandoned herself a little whispered word escaped her slightly parted lips. She said it over and over under the breath: "free, free, free!" The vacant stare and the look of terror that had followed it went from her eyes. They stayed keen and bright. Her pulses beat fast, and the coursing blood warmed and relaxed every inch of her body.

She did not stop to ask if it were or were not a monstrous joy that held her. A clear and exalted perception enabled her to dismiss the suggestion as trivial. She knew that she would weep again when she saw the kind, tender hands folded in death; the face that had never looked save with love upon her, fixed and gray and dead. But she saw beyond that bitter moment a long procession of years to come that would belong to her absolutely. And she opened and spread her arms out to them in welcome.

There would be no one to live for during those coming years; she would live for herself. There would be no powerful will bending hers in that blind persistence with which men and women believe they have a right to impose a private will upon a fellow-creature. A kind intention or a cruel intention made the act seem no less a crime as she looked upon it in that brief moment of illumination.

And yet she had loved him--sometimes. Often she had not. What did it matter! What could love, the unsolved mystery, count for in the face of this possession of self-assertion which she suddenly recognized as the strongest impulse of her being! "Free! Body and soul free!" she kept whispering.

Josephine was kneeling before the closed door with her lips to the keyhold, imploring for admission. "Louise, open the door! I beg; open the door--you will make yourself ill. What are you doing, Louise? For heaven's sake open the door."

"Go away. I am not making myself ill." No; she was drinking in a very elixir of life through that open window.

Her fancy was running riot along those days ahead of her. Spring days, and summer days, and all sorts of days that would be her own. She breathed a quick prayer that life might be long. It was only yesterday she had thought with a shudder that life might be long.

She arose at length and opened the door to her sister's importunities. There was a feverish triumph in her eyes, and she carried herself unwittingly like a goddess of Victory. She clasped her sister's waist, and together they descended the stairs. Richards stood waiting for them at the bottom.

Someone was opening the front door with a latchkey. It was Brently Mallard who entered, a little travel-stained, composedly carrying his grip-sack and umbrella. He had been far from the scene of the accident, and did not even know there had been one. He stood amazed at Josephine's piercing cry; at Richards' quick motion to screen him from the view of his wife.

When the doctors came they said she had died of heart disease--of the joy that kills.

THE ANT AND THE ELEPHANT

Once upon a time there lived an elephant in a jungle. He was very arrogant and short-tempered. He was very proud of his strength and huge body. The other animals in the jungle feared him a lot. He enjoyed doing things that showed off his strength and always troubled other small animals in the jungle.

In that jungle, there also lived a family of ants in a tiny hole. The ant used to despise the elephant for his haughty nature. One day, when the ants were away to collect food, the elephant stopped them and sprayed a trunk full of water on them.

The ants got angry and said" You should not trouble others for your pleasure. The elephant shouted angrily and said," You tiny creatures, keep quiet, or I will crush you to death." Now, the ants decided to teach the arrogant animal a lesson for life. They slowly crept under his trunk and spread to his ears and started biting him. The elephant became restless and started crying for help.

None of the animals came forward to rescue him. They were happy to see him getting punished for his acts. He kept apologizing to the ants, but they continued to bite him. When they were sure that he has learned his lesson, they let him go and said, "This is how others feel when you hurt them." The ants marched off leaving a wailing elephant there. Then on, the elephant never troubled anyone in the jungle.

One day, a farmer named Bholaram, bought a well from his neighbor, Dharma. Dharma was a cunning man. When Bholaram went to fetch water from the well the next day, Dharma stopped him.

When asked why, he said that he had sold only the well to Bholaram, not the water. To use the water, Bholaram must pay for it.

Bholaram was shocked to see the cunningness of his neighbour. He took the matter to the court of Emperor Akbar. There, his minister, Birbal was given the responsibility to solve the matter.

Birbal called Dharma and asked why he was not letting Bholaram take the water from the well. To this, he replied," just sold the well, not the water within it. So, Bholaram has no right over the water"

Birbal thought for a second and said, " Since you have sold the well to the farmer, you have no right to keep your water in it. If you do so, you have to pay him the rent for using his well. Else, take out all your water immediately.

Dharma was caught off guard. He realized his cunning scheme stood no chance before the razor-sharp wit of Birbal. He apologized and went home.
